Data preparation : Tried using the Kaggle dataset, but it didnt help me to understand the problem. Thought of reading the books from the Stanford university. A: You can use Kaggle with google colab. Follow the tutorial here and you'll get an idea of how to use google colab. Make sure to follow all steps mentioned in the tutorial and run it using the IDE. If you were to ask people what British producer Homebrew is most famous for, chances are they'll say "Breakfast." After all, it was his 14-hour mash-up that saw the UK break its longest dance record. That's not to mention his popular "Breakfast" series, or the fact that he's part of the duo known as "Horsepower Productions." There are plenty of reasons that Homebrew is a big deal, and it's all thanks to his absurdly unconventional style. But as luck would have it, there's another reason he's famous: he's also a big inspiration to today's budding producers. In a recent interview with Mixmag, Homebrew reminisced on how he came to create his unique style, and how he didn't even realize that he was a leader in modern production. "I started doing my thing because I didn't feel like I was appreciated for what I did," he explained. "I felt like I was being thought of as a producer when I wasn't and that's very hard to take on." At the time, the way in which Homebrew made beats was unique: he would work for hours on end on a single beat, with no repeats, using loops or anything. "When I started out, I didn't really know that much about how things work," he continued. "I did it because I wanted to learn more about it." The producer didn't even use basic instruments, either. "At the beginning, I didn't even have an Akai sample player," he explained. "I just did it all out of my head." He still works in this style, and he believes that the way in which he did it was all thanks to an "obsession 82157476af
