After indenting a file, to the current state of the file the terminal looks like: this is the first line that is why there is a space, but this is the 2nd line When looking at the file the contents look ok as follows: this is the first line that is why there is a space, but when viewing the file in the terminal the spacing is gone and the file is only indented a single space: this is the first line that is why there is a space, That seems to also not be a solution. A: Check these out: Shift-Tab to move to previous line. (This is standard for most editors.) Use the column editor to increase the indent (left side). You can find them in most terminals (since the screen's column is column 60, if I recall correctly) by typing: tail -n60 file And you can press the down arrow (or the ESC key on a PC) to increase the column's size. A Palestinian court in the West Bank city of Bethlehem has sentenced a US-based Christian to prison, in a trial that could deter others involved in Christian-owned businesses in the Holy Land. Ethan David Miller was sentenced to four months in prison, after being found guilty of practicing his Christian beliefs in his restaurant in Bethlehem, whilst serving an open order of hummus
